Salumatics designated a Member Organization of Integrating the Healthcare Enterprise (IHE) International

Standards collaborative group works to improve the interoperability of healthcare information systems

Mississauga, ON (June 28, 2011) – Information management company Salumatics Inc. today announced that it has been designated by Integrating the Healthcare Enterprise (IHE) International as a Member Organization, with special focus on the area of IT Infrastructure Planning.

IHE is an initiative by users and developers of healthcare information technology to improve the way computer systems in healthcare share information, promoting the coordinated use of established standards to address specific clinical needs.

According to Shawn Morrison, Chief Technology Office for Salumatics, “By becoming an IHE member organization, we re-affirm Salumatics’ commitment to improving the exchange of information among healthcare systems and accelerating the adoption of the electronic health record.”

To connect stakeholders in healthcare information technology, IHE follows a proven process in which clinical and technical experts define use cases, create specifications within established standards, implement the specifications in various systems, and conduct ongoing testing. Engaged stakeholders are committed to the interoperability of products and services.
