Salumatics Converts Paper Fetal Monitoring Strips to Digital for Upload to an Electronic Health Record System

Salumatics Inc. a leading provider of health information services in Canada and the United States is converting paper fetal monitoring strips to digital format and making them accessible to clinicians in the electronic health record (EHR) system at the JFK Medical Center, Edison, New Jersey.

The unique solution consists of scanning the original paper fetal monitoring strip, some of which are over 200 feet in length, and converting them to digital images which are then uploaded to the JFK EHR system. The paper fetal monitoring strips are transported to the Salumatics state of the art conversion facility in Mississauga, ON where they are converted to digital format using specialized high speed document scanners.

Digitizing the paper based fetal strips and making them accessible in the JFK Medical Center EHR system provides simultaneous instant access to multiple users from multiple locations. JFK realizes cost savings in that they do not have to pay for long term storage of the paper based fetal strips and the associated labour savings with retrieving the paper based fetal strips when requested.

About JFK Medical Center

JFK Medical Center, originally named John F. Kennedy Hospital as the first memorial to our nation's 35th president, was founded in 1966 as a community hospital. Today, JFK Medical Center has evolved into a 424-bed acute care medical/ surgical facility and healthcare complex specializing in cardiovascular care, neuroscience, oncology services, orthopedics and bariatrics.

Our level of service and team of professionals rank among the best in the nation with over 500 physicians, 2200 healthcare professionals and 300 volunteers.
